PREFACE

This is the sixth study we have undertaken of Spain's patriots in its 1779-1783 War with England, during the American Revolution; and it covers Louisiana, West Florida, East Florida, and related areas under Spanish control at the time. As we have worked our way across the Spanish Borderlands from California to Florida, we believe we have gained an appreciation of Spanish activities beyond that held by historians who have preceded us in recording the soldiers of Louisiana. Their interest has been in identifying the units and individuals of Louisiana who served, with little attention paid to the Spanish soldiers, mariners, and volunteers who constituted the bulk of the forces involved.

We know there were over 10,000 persons involved in the various army, naval, and mariner units of Spain and France, with about 2000 of that number coming from the militia, Indians, or other forces normally indigenous to or assigned to Louisiana. We believe we have doubled the number of identified persons whose service would qualify descendants to join the Sons of the American Revolution (SAR) or the Daughters of the American Revolution (DAR). We regret that we have been unable to travel to the libraries which hold additional information, but we have done what we could using interlibrary loan resources. We believe there are at least 6000 persons yet to be named as soldiers, sailors, or other patriots, serving along with General Gálvez.

We have prepared a consolidated list, with asterisks used to designate those for whom we believe records are suitable as documentation of service during the war. We have also included others who were of a suitable age, but for whom we did not see documentation. In our previous studies, we included lists of males over 18 who may have contributed to the war fund set up by King Carlos III for defraying expenses of the war. We found no direct record of contributions collected in Louisiana. It seems that there would have been collections, as many of the people were more able to contribute than those of New Mexico or California. We did find evidence of contributions in Cuba, which was under the same military jurisdiction. We also found no direct record of priests actually carrying out the request of King Carlos III to pray for victory. We assume they did, so priests are included as patriots. As priests left no descendants, the SAR interest is in finding and marking their burial sites.

Our presentation outline includes an introduction, a summary time line, then a listing of units involved in each engagement or campaign, then a listing of persons involved, then a list of references which may be useful to other researchers.

We express our appreciation to Ernesto Uribe, who went to the DAR Library and copied the unpublished work of Compatriot C. Robert Churchill of Louisiana. We thank Dr. Bonny (Hough) Miller who went to Tulane University Library in New Orleans to copy another compilation by Compatriot Churchill. We also express our appreciation to those persons in many libraries who work in interlibrary loan and who provided us with the works of F. de Borja Medina Rojas, William S. and Hazel P. Coker, Winston De Ville, Gilbert C. Din, Jack D. L. Holmes, Walter Lowrie, John F. McDermott, Elizabeth Shown Mills, Earl C. Woods, and many others whose previous efforts made our work possible.

I. INTRODUCTION

The history of Louisiana's activities during the Revolutionary War has been studied ever since the war was over. Since about 1925, the Daughters of the American Revolution (DAR) and the Sons of the American Revolution (SAR) have accepted as members the descendants of the soldiers and Louisiana militia who served under Governor Bernardo Gálvez. For these descendants, Governor Gálvez has become a folk hero.

For many Americans today, there is little recognition that Louisiana, as defined by the Louisiana Purchase from France in 1803, was during the Revolutionary War a Spanish frontier area under the Captain General of Cuba. It bordered the Provincias Internas of New Spain, the northern provinces from Texas to California; and, again as defined by the Louisiana Purchase, it bordered Texas, New Mexico, Sonora, and California. Its eastern borders were with British West Florida, which had been part of French Louisiana, which Spain had taken over from France at the end of the Seven Years War in 1763. Beyond British West Florida was East Florida, which had been Spanish Florida until the end of the Seven Years War. (The Seven Years War was an European conflagration which in American histories is called the French and Indian War.) Spain and France were heavy losers during this war, and at the end, the British held both Manila and Havana, trade and commerce bastions of the Spanish. In the settlement, Spain ceded Florida to Britain in exchange for Havana, but Spain got Louisiana from France. In effect, the French empire in America was divided between Britain and Spain with the boundary along the Mississippi River. Spain was not happy with its English neighbor and wanted to regain East Florida and unite it with West Florida.

So Spain was governed by self-interest in its outlook on the 1775 rebellion of the British colonies of the eastern seaboard against their English overlords. The question facing officials in Madrid, Havana, Mexico City, and New Orleans was: How can Spain take advantage of this conflict to regain its lost territories and consolidate its control over its North American frontier? No other country watched the conflict as closely as did Spain. Observers were sent to the Continental Congress and to various colonies to keep close tabs on progress of the rebellion. Refugees were given sanctuary and questioned in detail about the activities which caused them to flee. The Spanish probably knew more about the war and its problems and opportunities than some of the colonies themselves.

Spain could not directly and openly support the English colonies because it did not want to have problems with Portugal, which had become a British ally. Further, Spain did not want the virus of rebellion against European mother countries to spread. Perhaps Spain wanted the colonies to win, but in such a weakened condition that they would gravitate to Spanish control. Then there would be no incentive for Spanish colonies in America to follow the pull for independence.

Actually, one could say that Spain followed a course of action which won the immediate battles but lost the larger war of colonies rebelling against foreign domination. Spain did gain West Florida and East Florida, and it did reinforce its border, taking its campaign all the way to Michigan. However, during the lifetime of the soldiers who fought for Spain, country after country in the Americas declared independence from Spain; and many of the leaders for independence had gained experience during Spain's 1779-1783 War with England.

In 1776, Spain began clandestine support to the English Colonies, and it is the date of this support which the DAR now accepts as the beginning date of acceptable service for Louisiana militia and army units. Most militia and army personnel knew little about the clandestine support, so their contributions during this pre-war period are questionable; however, the DAR sets its own rules for its designated Louisiana Patriots. So far as is known, the SAR uses as its beginning date of acceptable service the date of declaration of war, 21 June 1779. Each accepts service until 3 Sep 1783. Actually, each would probably accept service later than 3 Sep 1783 as the war was not known to be over until the early part of 1784.

2. LOUISIANA TIME LINE

1776. Bernardo de Gálvez arrived in Louisiana as Colonel of the Louisiana Infantry Regiment. At that time Louisiana was still organized as Governor Alejandro O'Reilly had left it. New Orleans was organized under a Cabildo. There were Lt Governors for Natchitoches and for Illinois. There were local commanders for the parishes of St Charles, First German Coast; St Charles, Second German Coast; First Acadian Coast; Second Acadian Coast; Cabahanose; Opelousas; Attakapas; Pointe Coupée; Rapides; and Ste Genevieve.

19 Sep 1776. Gálvez succeeded Unzaga as Governor of Louisiana.

25 Nov 1776. Governor Gálvez received instructions from his uncle, Josef de Gálvez, Minister of the Indies, to send secret commissioners to the English colonies to collect information. He also was to begin shipping gunpowder to the American rebels, with $70,000 worth going the first year.

1777. Governor Gálvez assessed his position in Louisiana. He counted 17,926 people, with 1448 in the Illinois country (St Louis northward). 1956 were able to bear arms to protect the 1500 mile frontier. He requested reinforcements in soldiers and settlers, which were not long in coming.

1778. Caballero de Croix of the Provincias Internas asked Gálvez to join in a campaign to wipe out the Apaches, with Louisiana furnishing 300 to 400 of its famed woodsmen hunters and marksmen. Though Gálvez had previously served against the Apaches, he had to turn down the request because of impending hostilities with the English.

Feb 1778. Aggravating the situation for Gálvez was the American Expedition against the Loyalists of West Florida by Captain James Willing, who had formerly lived at Natchez and who took refuge in New Orleans after his expedition failed. British authorities of West Florida, with headquarters at Pensacola, reinforced their forces at Baton Rouge and Natchez.

1778/79. Canary Island soldier reinforcements came with their families as potential settler/soldiers. As quickly as he could, Gálvez settled them, and sorted out and separated those who could best fight as soldiers from those who could best farm and guard the home front. 700 soldiers eventually came, along with 1600 wives and children.

1779. Governor Gálvez arranged for Texas settlers to move cattle and horses to Louisiana as logistic support for the anticipated war with England.

13 Jul 1779. Having been forewarned that war would be declared, Gálvez held a Junta de Guerra, which recommended that New Orleans be protected. Gálvez believed New Orleans could best be protected by attacking and eliminating the threat, though that is not what the Junta had in mind.

27 Aug 1779. Gálvez began his secret march north to eliminate the British installations at Baton Rouge and Natchez. He reached Manchac, an outpost of Baton Rouge, on 6 Sep and took the fort on 7 Sep. He quickly moved on to Baton Rouge, which fell on 21 Sep. Under terms of surrender at Baton Rouge, Fort Panmure at Natchez was also to transfer to Spanish control, which it did on 5 Oct 1779. The next target was Mobile.

1780. The Mobile Campaign began in earnest and the town was captured after a 21 day fight on 14 Mar 1780 just in time, as British and Indian reinforcements were about ten miles away. Mobile was fortified with Fort Charlotte and became a base for operations against Pensacola.

1780. The British in Canada had not given up the concept of capturing New Orleans from the North, or at least gaining control of the river basin so they could stop Spanish supplies from reaching the eastern colonies. They formed a coalition of Indians and British which began moving south, reaching St Louis on 26 May 1780. The inhabitants of the town had been forewarned of the attack and asked Gálvez for help; but he was deeply involved in planning to attack Pensacola and could furnish no assistance. The people of St Louis fortified their town and made ready for the attack. When it came they fought so valiantly that the much superior number of Indians and British fell back, though they devastated the countryside and captured many people on the Mississippi River. As soon as the Spanish people of the Illinois country could recover, they joined with American forces from across the Mississippi River in punitive expeditions against the Indian tribes and the British strongholds which supported them. One Spanish contingent reached St Joseph, Michigan, and burned the town in 1781.

1780/81. The first effort in Spring, 1780, to capture Pensacola was aborted because the army and navy could not agree on how to do it. The second was wiped out by a hurricane, but Gálvez went to Havana for another try. He got French support, plus support from Cuba, Mexico, and other West Indies areas. He took Pensacola 8 May 1781. As a diversion, British Loyalists had recaptured Fort Panmure at Natchez on 22 April, but they gave up 23 June when they learned that Pensacola, their capitol, had fallen.

1782. Governor Gálvez was appointed Field Marshal and took over military operations for the entire West Indies. The Bahamas fell in 1782 after a fairly routine operation. The war ended before Gálvez could move against Jamaica.

1781. Estevan Miró became acting governor of Louisiana in 1781 and received the title in 1782. He continued as Governor until 1792. At first he had to stop some annoying operations on the Mississippi River against Arkansas Post led by James Logan Colbert, a Chickasaw Indian Chief with a British Army Commission. Colbert had been joined by some of the West Florida Loyalists who had fled after Fort Panmure was retaken by the Spanish. Increasingly after 1783, Miró had conflicts with the Americans, rather than British, over trade and navigation rights, as well as boundary conflicts.

1783. Bernardo de Gálvez went to Spain in 1783 as a hero and later in 1784 became Viceroy of New Spain, but his early death in Mexico in 1786 prevented him from carrying out his vision of the Spanish role in the Americas.

3. PARTICIPATING GROUPS IN THE WAR ACTIVITIES

A. Summary. Those who contributed to Spain's 1779-1783 War with England, as it related to Louisiana, directly or indirectly, included individuals, groups of citizens, militia, merchant mariners, Spanish naval ships and privateers, French naval ships and privateers, American naval ships and privateers, Spanish Army units, French Army units, and other American groups. There were those who risked their lives in pre-war clandestine activities supporting the Americans. There were background planners in Havana, Mexico City, Madrid, Paris, and other places who saw no combat, but whose roles were absolutely essential as government officials, financiers, and expeditors for those who fought. There were militia groups which saw no action, but were ready for it. Many ordinary men and women who were asked to make donations to defray expenses of the war did so. There were even the priests, who in the declaration of war were enjoined to pray for success against the English. The following listings try to summarize what is known about each major campaign.

B. Clandestine Aid. Spain had more to gain, and more to lose, than any other country except England and the English colonies in the Revolutionary War. Her initial aim was to weaken England in any way she could, and one obvious way was to support the rebellion in the English colonies. She did not want her own colonies to be infected with revolutionary fervor, but that was a risk she had to take. In 1776, the Minister of the Indies, Josef de Gálvez, communicated to his nephew, Governor Bernardo de Gálvez, the order to begin clandestine support and surveillance of the activities of the English colonies. This support went through various merchant channels, and arrived at American seaports, or it went up the Mississippi and Ohio Rivers to reach the colonies from the west. The center for the aid through the river system was New Orleans and Louisiana. Later, when France entered the war, aid was provided under French and Dutch cover companies.

C. Recruiting Canary Islanders. Governor Gálvez took a census in 1777 and found he had only about 2000 persons to defend an ill-defined frontier of several thousand miles in length. He asked for settlers and army volunteers, and he was promised 700 Canary Island volunteers for the Louisiana Infantry Regiment. This number would allow a second battalion to be formed. The recruiting campaign began in the Canary Islands and was successful in finding 700 volunteers, who along with their families, were sent to America in nine ships beginning in 1778. The first was the packet boat Santísima Sacramento with 125 recruits, 53 with families, which embarked 10 Jul 1778. Sickness broke out on this ship, 6 recruits died, and several more were so sick that the ship stopped in Havana to leave them there to recover. This first ship went on to New Orleans with about 110 recruits. The second ship, the polacre La Victoria, embarked 22 Oct 1778 and went direct to New Orleans with 88 recruits, 53 with families. The third ship, the frigate San Ignacio de Loyola, embarked 29 Oct 1778 and went direct to New Orleans with 115 recruits, 95 with families. The fourth ship, the packet boat San Juan Nepomuseno, embarked 9 Dec 1778 and went direct to New Orleans with 53 recruits, 48 with families. The fifth ship, the frigate La Santa Fe, embarked 17 Feb 1779 and went direct to New Orleans with 102 recruits, 90 with families. The recruits from these five ships later saw action either in the Louisiana Infantry Regiment or in the militia units where they were settled.

The remaining ships were caught up in the beginning of the war with England. The sixth ship, the frigate El Sagrada Carazon de Jesús, embarked 6 June 1779 and got to Havana with 423 passengers, where they were held for most of the war. The total number of soldiers shipped at that time was 600, 444 with families. Remaining in the Canaries awaiting transportation were 100 recruits, 75 with families. The seventh ship, the brigantine San Carlos, embarked in 1780 with 47 recruits and 112 dependents. The British captured this ship and put the passengers ashore in Tortosa, where with great difficulty, they made their way to Puerto Rico, thence to Havana. The eighth ship, the brigantine San Pedro, embarked in 1780 with 35 recruits and 84 dependents; and she wound up in Caracas and never reached Louisiana. The ninth ship, the brigantine Nuestra Señora de los Dolores, embarked in 1780 with 17 recruits and 72 dependents and delivered them to Havana, where they were held with the others. Thirty-six of the families who were in Havana were sent to Pensacola after it was captured in 1781 and they show up there on the 1784 census. To replace the recruits stranded in Havana, Governor Gálvez accepted a number of recruits from Mexico.

After hostilities were over, those remaining in Cuba were moved to New Orleans in two ships, the frigate Margarita, which left Havana 28 June 1783, and in the packet boat Santísima Trinidad, which embarked from Havana 19 Aug 1783. The Delfin carried six more to New Orleans in Dec 1783. A few people stranded in the Canary Islands and in Havana moved later, on whatever ships had space.

D. Baton Rouge Campaign. As soon as he learned war was to be declared, Governor Gálvez began planning to eliminate the threats to New Orleans from the British forces near the Mississippi River. He used forces he could move secretly which were almost entirely units or boats he controlled in Louisiana. Records show that Gálvez arrived at Manchac on 6 Sep 1779, an outpost of Baton Rouge, with 1427 men including:

1. 170 veterans (probably from the Louisiana Infantry Regiment).
2. 330 recruits (from Mexico and Canary Islands).
3. 20 Carabineers (probably from an elite New Orleans militia unit.)
4. 60 militiamen from New Orleans.
5. 80 free black and mulatto militiamen.
6. 7 American volunteers.
7. 160 friendly Indians.
8. The above comes to a total of 827 persons. The other 600 were probably militiamen from the German Coast, Pointe Coupee, Attakapas, and Opelousas, regulars from the Mallorca Inf. Regt and the Havana Inf. Regt.
9. The Galveztown militia under Capt. Joseph Pauly became involved after Manchac and captured Post Green on the Iberville River, plus two British ships on the Galveztown Bayou.

Apparently there were no additional land forces in the capture of Baton Rouge and Fort Panmure at Natchez. Outposts on the Amite River and Thompson's Creek also surrendered. On the lakes (Pontchartrain and Maurepas), Capt William Pickles and 7 American volunteers captured the British corsair West Florida. Vicente Rillieux and 14 men ambushed a British barque. In total, the naval activity netted 3 schooners, one corsair, one brigantine, and 3 sloops.

It would appear that there were perhaps 1500 persons involved in the combat operations. In their support were others in New Orleans and in other areas which sent militia. Names of perhaps 1200 of these persons can be documented. More work has been done on this group than any other except those in the Battle of St Louis.

E. Mobile Campaign. As soon as the Mississippi River area was secure, Governor Gálvez sent Estevan Miró to Havana to seek 2000 more troops for an attack on Mobile, but Miró could only get 567. Gálvez combined the forces he had with these and moved against Mobile in Feb 1780. His forces included:

1. 567 soldiers from the Regiment of Navarre.
2. 50 soldiers from the Havana Regiment.
3. 141 soldiers from the Louisiana Regiment.
4. 14 gunners.
5. 26 carabineers.
6. 323 white militiamen.
7. 107 negro and mulatto militiamen.
8. 24 negro slaves.
9. 26 American volunteers.

This totals to 1278 persons, though 1321 is frequently seen. Probably 1500 soldiers and sailors were involved in the Battle of Mobile. After a 21 day siege, the surrender took place 14 Mar 1780. This was just in time, as a relief force of 1100 British and Creek Indians were just a few miles away. The second phase of the Mobile campaign was its defense against the British counter-attack on 7 Jan 1781, mentioned below.

In addition, there were crews for the four transports which brought the Regiment of Navarre and other ships which moved troops from New Orleans and Havana. The best reference for the ships involved is William S. Coker and Hazel P. Coker, The Siege of Mobile, 1780, in Maps, with Data on Troop Strength, Military Units, Ships, Casualties, and Prisoners of War including a brief history of Fort Charlotte (Condé), the Perdido Bay Press, Pensacola, 1982, referenced below as M:page.

El Cayman, frigate with 177 men in Feb 1780 from Havana, 22 cannon.

El Kaulcan, King's brig, 14 guns, Jan 1780 from New Orleans.

El Volante, frigate from New Orleans in Jan 1780.

El Renombrado, brig, 110 men, 18 cannon, Feb 1780 from Havana.

El Terrible, sloop, cargo of salt, Feb 1780 from Havana.
Gálvez/Gálveztown, brig, from New Orleans, Jan 1780.
La Merced, galley, Jan 1780 from New Orleans.
Los Dos Hermanos, brig sent 1 Jan 1780 to Havana to get more troops.
Misericordia, merchant frigate, Jan 1780 from New Orleans.
Rosario, packet boat, hospital ship, Jan 1780 from New Orleans.
San Francisco de Paula, galley, Jan 1780 from New Orleans.
San Pio, packet boat, 141 men, 18 cannon, Feb 1780 from Havana.
San Salvador de Orta, brig from New Orleans in Jan 1780.
San Vicente de Ferrer, galley, Jan 1780 from New Orleans.
Santa Teresa, brig, 101 men, 14 cannon, Feb 1780 from Havana.
Valenzuela, galley from New Orleans in Jan 1780.
 Unknown galley, Jan 1780 from New Orleans.
 Unknown galley, Jan 1780 from New Orleans.
 Unknown Catalan galley, Feb 1780 from Havana.

F. Battle of St Louis. All the activities of the Illinois country in 1780 and 1781 were centered on St. Louis, which was the main block to moving forces down the Mississippi River. There were persistent rumors that the British and their Indian allies would come down from Canada and join with the West Florida forces to attack New Orleans. This was a logical strategic maneuver as it would contain the rebelling English colonies and cut off the route for Spanish support via the river system. With forewarning, the inhabitants of St Louis were able to fortify the town and prepare for the attack, which came 26 May 1780. About 300 defenders were able to withstand 2000 to 3000 attackers, mostly Indians backed up by British and French Canadian soldiers. A prong of the British attack under Capt. Bird was more successful in Kentucky, where it captured Ruddle's Fort and Martin's Station. Those who qualify as patriots include:

1. Those who built the fortifications in the weeks before the attack.
2. Two companies of militia who defended the town, designated below as ILMil.
3. Militiamen from Ste Genevieve (requests were for 2 boatloads, each with 3rd militiamen plus Ensign and Lieutenant.)
4. Those captured on the Mississippi River (which may have included some of the Saint Genevieve militia.)
5. Those killed or captured in the farming areas near St Louis.
6. American militiamen and families killed or captured by Capt. Bird's forces in Kentucky.
7. Those who took part in the retaliatory campaigns in 1780 and 1781.
8. Those American forces who joined in the retaliatory campaign of 1781.

The total population of the area was involved in these wartime activities. There were perhaps 1000 persons, of whom names are known for about 500.

G. Pensacola Campaign. Pensacola, as Capitol of West Florida and home for the major British force for the Gulf Coast, was the main target after Mobile. There were actually four phases, the first in early 1780 not landing, the second in 1780 being destroyed by a hurricane, the third able to attack and isolate the area, and the fourth the reinforcements from Mobile, New Orleans, and Cuba. The best way to show all the ships and units which participated is to consolidate them into one list. The best reference is:

Gustave, brigantine which may have remained in support in Havana.
Petite Minerve, schooner which may have remained in support in Havana.

The first expedition departed from Havana on 7 March 1780 with 20 transports and 11 men-of-war, and over 5900 officers and men. It arrived at Pensacola but did not attack because the army and naval forces could not agree on tactics. The force went on to Mobile, but returned to Havana.

The second expedition included seven warships, five frigates, one packet boat, one brig, one armed lugger, and 51 transports carrying 3829 men. En route, the convoy was struck by a hurricane which raged from 18 to 31 Oct, 1780. Some of the ships wound up in New Orleans, others in Mobile, but most got to Campeche (Yucatan Peninsula). There were 66 ships in all, with 51 transports, with a total of 5000 to 6000 persons in all. Of the transports, 23 reached Campeche, 6 Mobile, 3 New Orleans, 8 Havana, and 11 other Cuban ports. Soon afterwards, the village of Mobile was attacked on 7 Jan 1781 by a force from Pensacola, which was beaten off with considerable losses. It was clear that the English were going to fight hard to hold West Florida. (700 men from the second battalion of the Regiment of Spain in the Pensacola expedition had been shipwrecked at Mobile by the hurricane, and they formed the backbone for the successful defense of the Mobile Village.)

Gálvez returned to Havana to re-form for a third expedition on Pensacola in Feb 1781. In the 1781 attack, Gálvez led the entry into the bay. Gálvez had brought 1315 men from Havana in 31 transports. Later he was joined by 905 men from Mobile and 1348 from New Orleans, bringing his total command up to 3768 for the initial attack, plus the naval forces. There were detachments from Louisiana, Cuba, other parts of the West Indies, Mexico, Spain, and France.

The fourth phase of reinforcing the Pensacola siege came in Apr, 1781. Francisco de Saavedre, the direct representative of King Carlos III, made it his business to know what was going on. He came with the reinforcements from Cuba, and he showed on 22 Apr 1781 that the attacking forces included 7806 men, including: 1607 in Manuel de Cagigal's detachment, 1505 seamen, and 275 Frenchmen (part of the reinforcements). There were about 2500 British defenders. Pensacola surrendered 10 May 1781 and Spain regained all of West Florida.

Units of many regiments took part, and individual officers of other regiments joined in the action. Some of those mentioned are included below:

Regiment of Aragon. C&C:104-05, 109, 112, 116. (287 troops).
Regiment of Spain. C&C:92, 94-95, 98, 101, 103, 105, 107, 109, 116, (482 troops).
2d Regiment of Cataluna. C&C:95, 97, 112, 116, (228 troops including detachment of dragoons).
Volunteers of Cataluna. C&C:109, (91 troops).
Regiment of the Crown. (Prob. alternate name for King's Inmemorial Regiment.)
Regiment of Flanders. C&C:103-105, 112, 116, (424 troops).
Regiment of Guadalajara. C&C:98, 103, 105, 109, 112, 116, (328 troops).
Fixed Regiment of Havana. C&C:90, 93-95, 97, 101, 107, 109, 114, 116, (244 troops).
Fusiliers of Havana. C&C:116, (78 troops).
Regiment of Hibernia (Irish). C&C:80, 103, 105, 112, 116, 121, (467 troops, but this regiment had more casualties than any other).
King's Inmemorial Regiment. C&C:48, 66, 94-95, 97, 103, 105, 109, 116, (419 troops).
Regiment of Louisiana. C&C:116, (149 troops).
Regiment of Navarro. C&C:90, 94-98, 101, 103, 105, 107, 109, 116, (672 troops, members of the 5th, 7th, and 8th Companies.).
Regiment of Mallorca. C&C:80,
Fixed Regiment of New Orleans.
Regiment of Soria. C&C:98, 103-105, 190, 112, 116, (495 troops).
Regiment of the Prince. C&C:90, 93-94, 101, 103, 105, 107, 109, 116, (257 troops).
Regiment of Zamora.
3rd Marine Company.
Regiment of Toledo (detachment).
Regiment of Naples (detachment).
Royal Corps of Artillery. C&C:90, 97, 107, 110, 112, 116, (471 seamen and marines, French and Spanish).
Colored Militia of Havana. C&C:106, (262 troops).
Colored Militia of New Orleans. C&C:116, (173 troops).
Dragoons of America. C&C:98, 109-110, (97 troops).
Dragoons of Louisiana. C&C:109, (43 troops).
Grenadiers of Louisiana. C&C:109, (included 53 whites, 143 colored militia and 123 free blacks)
Rangers of Louisiana. C&C:109, (included 82 whites, and colored militia and free blacks in the totals with Grenadiers)
French Division. C&C:116, (509 troops). There is some indication that the French troops were from the Angenois Regiment (the Foresters). Others show there were small detachments from the Regiments of du Cap, Poitou, Gatinois, and Cambresis.
4th Brigade at Pensacola. C&C:116, (all Navy and attached, total of 1323).
General Headquarters. C&C:116, (13 Carbineers and 107 sappers (mostly armed slaves working on fortifications).

Of the 7800+ individuals who made the attack on Pensacola, names of perhaps 2000 are known and are listed in Chapter 4. The other names have not been recovered, although some rosters taken during the hostilities are known to exist.

H. Natchez Uprising. During the Pensacola Campaign, some pro-British (Tory) West Florida settlers organized a militia force and captured Fort Panmure at Natchez. They held the fort for about one month, then capitulated when they learned that Pensacola had been captured. The Spanish militia soldiers involved in the surrender and recapture have not been separately listed, as they were probably the same as those who were in the Baton Rouge Campaign.

I. Mississippi River Activities. Following the Natchez disaster, many of those involved took refuge among the Chickasaws and Choctaws. The Chickasaw chief, James Colbert, held a British Army commission and was strongly anti-Spanish. He attacked Arkansas Post and captured several of its soldiers. He also captured several boats operating on the Mississippi River. Most of those who defended Arkansas Post or were captured on the river are known and included in Chapter 4.

J. Texas Drovers. Before the war ever started, Governor Gálvez developed his logistical support by arranging to buy beef in Texas and having it driven to Louisiana. These beef and horse supplying operations began in 1779 and continued through the war and afterwards. Names of the wartime drovers are included in Chapter 4.

K. Gálvez' Later Campaigns. As Field Marshal and Commander of Spanish Forces in America, Gálvez after 1782 was located in Havana. There he and Saavedra, the King's representative, planned to attack Jamaica and other English strongholds in the West Indies, and eventually to liberate Charlestown from British occupation. However, they were depending on the French fleet to support them, and that fleet was thoroughly mauled by British Admiral Rodney in two sea battles of the Saintes. While they waited for new support from Europe, Gálvez sent a force to the Bahamas and captured Provincetown, which had been a haven for privateers. By early 1783, preliminary agreements had been made to end the hostilities, and the Jamaica operation never took place. By terms of the agreement, Spain got West and East Florida, and the Bahamas were returned to England.

L. Miscellaneous Maritime Activities. When Spain in 1776 began its clandestine support for the English colonies, it used merchantmen and other ships to move gunpowder, guns, and other supplies from West Indies ports to New Orleans, thence up the river system to the colonies. Later, many of these supply efforts moved from New Orleans or other West Indies ports directly to eastern ports of the colonies. Hundreds of people were involved in these efforts, and the British officials in New Orleans complained to the Governor of Louisiana about each ship they suspected. Thus the Governor's correspondence is a good source of information about shipping under the purview of the Governor of Louisiana. Later, during the Mobile and Pensacola operations, the Governor of Louisiana was in a critical support role. The correspondence was from or to Governors Unzaga, Gálvez and Miró.

Reference: Arthur, Stanley Clisby, Index to the Dispatches of the Spanish Governors of Louisiana, 1766-1792, New Orleans, Polyanthos, 1975. The period from 1776 through 1783 was covered in Books Two and Three, and each book is divided into volumes, and each volume into numbered pages. In the listing of ships below, we use Abook#:volume:page (example A2:VI:15). To learn what each ship was doing, one would have to use original records in Spain or use a photocopy of the original files. One copy was placed in the Howard-Tilton Memorial Library of Tulane University, New Orleans, in 1917.

Some of the ships are known to have participated in Mobile and Pensacola campaigns; however, all are listed because crews changed through time. Also, the nationality of some of the ships is in question, but known British ships have been eliminated. Considering normal crew size, there may be about 1000 persons who would qualify as Patriots of Spain's 1776-1779 clandestine supply efforts to the English colonies or in Spain's 1779-1783 War with England.

Caughey:page. Caughey, John Walton, Bernardo de Gálvez in Louisiana, 1776-1783, University of California Press, Berkeley, CA, 1934. Caughey mentioned American, Spanish, and Indian individuals who took part in the activities related to the American Revolutionary War.

C:issue number. Churchill, C. Robert, "The Gálvez Expedition:1779-1783," The New Orleans Genesis, beginning with #60, which is Vol XVIII (September, 1976), and continuing for several years. The soldiers are listed by company and battalion and regiment, with 1st Company, 1st Battalion, and Infantry Regiment of Louisiana being shown as 1/1/LA. Before the Infantry Regiment of Louisiana was formed, the forces were called the Louisiana Battalion of Infantry, which is designated as Company#/LA Bn. The fixed regiment of New Orleans (militia) is shown as Company #/NO Regt, or as #/LA Vols. The militia units were on the German Coast in two companies, designated GC1 and GC2; Acadians of two companies, designated Ac1 and Ac2; an Iberville company, designated Ib1; an Point Coupée company designated PC1; an Attakapas company designated At1; a Lower Coast below New Orleans company designated LC1; a Lafourche de Chetima company designated LF1; a Valenzuela company designated V1; a Cabahanose (St James) company designated SJ1; A Galveztown company designated G1; an Opelousas company designated O1; a Natchitoches infantry company designated N1, and a cavalry company designated N2, and others designated N; a St Genoveva company designated SG1; two Illinois (St Louis) companies designated First Company and Second Company; Mobile company designated M1; and two New Orleans Militia companies designated NOMil1 and NOMil2. This compilation seems to have included all those made before by Churchill. One copy was placed in the Howard-Tilton Memorial Library of Tulane University, New Orleans, 70118, and this copy has been used to microfilm the compilation. The New Orleans Genesis excerpts, noted above, were taken from this collection, also those of Winston De Ville, noted below; however, neither of these included all the Spanish, French, and West Indies soldiers and mariners listed by Churchill.

Coker:page. Coker, William S., and G. Douglas Inglis. The Spanish Censuses of Pensacola, 1784-1820: A Genealogical Guide to Spanish Pensacola. Pensacola, FL, The Perdido Bay Press, 1980. The 1784 census does not designate who is a soldier and who is not. For this reason, all free males over 19 are listed, provided they are not living with their parents. Wives are shown and children, if any, are indicated. Other records would have to be studied to determine if any of the Pensacola males were Patriots during the 1779-1783 period. (It is clear that a number of the families are those of Canary Islander soldier volunteers for Louisiana who had been stranded in Cuba during the hostilities.)

Robert Churchill, but it does not include the listings of Spanish officers and soldiers Churchill had made. (De Ville was working with the DAR and was under the impression that the only descendants who would be accepted into that organization were those who had settled in Louisiana. He thus ignored the Spanish who served but returned to Cuba or other Spanish or French areas.)

Din:page. Din, Gilbert C., The Canary Islanders of Louisiana, Baton Rouge, LA, Louisiana State University Press, 1988. This book gives a much improved reading of the passenger lists over that of Sidney Villeré, and it explains how the Canary Islanders were recruited and escorted. Nine ships were embarked by 1780, and five reached New Orleans before the war. The sixth ship, abbreviated below as Jesu, reached Havana, but had to stay there until the war was over. Of the remaining three ships, the Nuestra de los Dolores, also reached Havana, where its passengers had to stay until the war was over. The San Carlos was captured by the British and its passengers were deposited at Tortuga. Most got to Puerto Rico, thence to Havana, where they joined the passengers of the Jesu and Dolores. The ninth ship, the San Pedro, landed at the port for Caracas, and there seems to be no record that the soldiers of this ship ever got to Louisiana. After the war was over, 36 of the families went to Pensacola, then the remainder were moved to Louisiana in 1783 in the three ships Margarita, Trinidad, and Delfin. (See also the listing below for Villeré.)

The men who came were Canary Island (designated CI) soldiers under arms, speaking a Portuguese dialect. They were recruited for the Louisiana Infantry Regiment, which was to pay their costs of moving and settling. As the sections of the book are separately numbered and indexed, the following abbreviations are used for the sections:

Sac, Santísima Sacramento, embarked 26 Jul 1778.

Ignó, San Ignacio de Loyola, embarked 9 Oct 1778.

Vic, La Victoria, embarked 15 Oct 1778.

Nepo, San Juan Nepomuceno, embarked 9 Dec 1778.

Fas, La Santa Fas, embarked 17 Feb 1779.

Jesu, El Sagrado Carazon de Jesús, embarked 6 June 1779, passengers stranded in Havana.

Tab, Terra de Buys/Terre-aux-Boeuf, in Saint Bernard Parish, where many settled.

Marg, Frigate Margarita, embarked from Havana 28 June 1783, moving stranded passengers.

Trin, Santisima Trinidad, embarked from Havana 7 Aug 1783, moving stranded passengers.

The final ship, Delfin, from Havana, which landed in New Orleans in Dec, 1783.

Other areas where the Canary Islanders settled were "Galveztown," located on the shores of the Amite River near Manchac, in Iberville Parish (this settlement was unsuccessful); "Valenzuela," located on the shores of the Chetimachas (Bayou Lafourche) in Assumption Parish; and "Nuevo Iberia," located on the shores of Bayou Teche in Iberia Parish (this area was part of the Attakapas country). In 1782, 36 families who had been stranded in Havana moved to Pensacola, where they show on the 1784 census. (See entry under Din.)

The Daughters of the American Revolution also accepts those who served as early as 1776. Others may also qualify, but we did not see specific information which would confirm this. Descendants may know of other references which would qualify these persons.)

Note to Readers: One question frequently asked is why the Daughters of the American Revolution (DAR) accepts militia service in Louisiana back to 24 Dec 1776, before war was declared. The answer lies in the authorization of clandestine aid by Spain to the American Colonies on that date. A translation of that order follows:

"Spanish Aid - the King's Order of 24 Dec 1776," prepared by José de Gálvez, Minister of the Indies.

The King (Carlos III), informed regarding documents in letters numbering 181 and 184 of the 7th and 30th of last September (1776) on the Americans' intentions delivered through General Charles Lee, military commander and commander-in-chief of the Southern District and through his agent Mr. (George) Gibson, reduced principally to solicit the establishment of systematic commerce with us and to ask if, in the event of the (American) seizure of Pensacola, as they are attempting, your Majesty will be pleased to administer it (Pensacola). The answer regarding these items you (Luis de Unzaga) gave to General Lee has merited royal approval and His Majesty commands me to caution you very secretly that assisting the Americans in their project to capture Pensacola and the other English settlements on the right bank of that (Mississippi) river, you inform them (Americans) with the maximum caution and secrecy that the King (Carlos III) will be delighted that they obtain it and that independence assured, the ceding that they (Americans) promise to Spain will be dealt with.

In order to facilitate both objectives, you (Unzaga) will be receiving through Havana and other means that may be possible, the weapons, munitions, clothes and quinine which the English (American) Colonists ask (for) and the most sagacious and secretive (ways) will be established by you in order that you may supply these secretly with the appearance of selling them to private merchants, to which objectives and corresponding secret instructions will be sent and some business person that may serve as contact.

By the same mail the corresponding secret information is given to the governor of Havana (Diego José Navarro) informing him through the monthly mail and free commerce ships that he will receive various items, weapons and other supplies that he will be sending to you without delay and that also may send you then the surplus powder available in that Plaza (Havana) from the Mexico Factory and whatever muskets that might be in that same Plaza (in the certainty that they will be quickly replaced).

At the order of His Majesty, I inform you of everything for your information and government, with special duty that you may take advantage of the opportunities which may arise for the continuation of the respective news about these important objectives in order to transmit them to His Majesty. May God protect you many years. Madrid, 24 of December of 1776, Joseph de Gálvez to the Governor of Louisiana.

A Note to Readers: "The Many Wondrous Ways to Make Mistakes with Louisiana Names."

The names of Louisiana people before 1800 had their origins in Germany, France, Spain, England, native America, and Africa. Each person had a native tongue, or language, but generally had to know some words of other languages. Most were not literate, so the recording of names was phonetic, according to the hearing and native language of the recorder. The French name, Thibeaux or Thibeault, might be exactly recorded in French, but an English recorder would put it down as Tebo. A Spanish recorder would put it as Tibo. The German name Johan Edelmeyer to the Spanish ear sounds like Juan Ydelmaire. Following is a list of some problems encountered in the compilation of Louisiana names.

1. Failure to recognize the name in different forms, or as recorded in French, Spanish, or English. Therefore, the patriot compilation may have the same person recorded with different names, or variants of the same name.

2. Failure to recognize there were two or more persons with identical names in the same jurisdiction. There are many examples among the Acadian and German families of several grandsons of an immigrant, each with the identical name of the grandfather. When these persons enlisted, it is difficult to determine whether there were several persons, or just one person in several records. In Spanish families, this problem shows up in certain common names and surnames such as Juan Sánchez. Therefore the patriot compilation may combine records which belong to two persons, or it may show separate records for the same person.

3. Failure to recognize a person identified in one jurisdiction who moved to another. For example, some names appear in the New Orleans militia in 1775, then in St Louis in 1780. Were these the same or different persons? Unless it is unmistakably clear from other evidence, this compilation shows each jurisdiction as if it were completely independent. This clearly introduces errors for some persons.

4. Inability to read the script. Clearly, those who worked with the original records struggled to read the names, not well recorded in the first place, then faded and torn by time. The names are thus an approximation to what was recorded. Sometimes, one can make an intelligent guess as to what was intended, based on French, Spanish, and English phonetics; but sometimes it defies imagination as to what the recorder heard and put down.

5. KENTUCKY PATRIOTS - CAPTIVES TO CANADA

References: Quaife, Milo M. "When Detroit Invaded Kentucky," Filson Club History Quarterly, Vol 1, #2, (Jan 1927), pp 53-67.

Internet site, <http://www.shawhan.com/captives.html> Jim Sellars and Bob Francis, both descendants of the captives, provided additional information. If readers find ancestors on the following list, they should contact Jim Sellars at jsellars3@aol.com for more complete and updated information.

When the British were working out their plans for capturing St Louis, they sent the main force down the Mississippi river system and attacked St Louis on 18 June 1780; but they also sent a secondary force down the eastern side of the River to block General George Rogers Clark at the Falls of the Ohio. The main force failed in its attack on St Louis, but the secondary force under Captain Henry Bird was very successful; but in ways not anticipated in the planning. Capt Bird had a force of 150 white soldiers and several hundred Indians. As Capt Bird moved his forces up the Ohio River, his Indian allies began to question his orders. They had no stomach for attacking Clark, who was in a strong situation, well reinforced. At Licking Creek, the Indians proposed they go up the creek and capture the towns and farms in the interior of Kentucky. There they would have plenty of booty and loot to share. Bird could not dissuade them, and his white forces were not strong enough to prevail. So they all went along with the first target being Ruddell's Station. When they attacked, the defenders did their best; but when Bird brought into view his small cannon, they surrendered. Despite promises to the contrary, the Indians looted the place and killed all the livestock. Their next target was Martin's Station which they easily captured. Bird was more successful in restraining the warriors; but food was in short supply, because the warriors had killed so much of the livestock. They began their retreat to Detroit, which Capt Bird reached 4 Aug 1780, with 150 prisoners. 200 more prisoners were on the way in the hands of the Indians. The names of those captured in the campaign have been recovered from various U. S., British, and family records and may have included:

(John Zinn, the last person on this list, was released from captivity in June 1783; and he went back to Kentucky accompanied by four captives, two listed above, plus Benj. Cottingkon and Richard Rue.)

Once the prisoners were in Detroit, great pressures were placed on them to renounce their ties to the Rebels and to join British forces. They were promised land and settlement subsidies. Even Capt. Isaac Ruddell could not resist the pressure and he joined up. After the war was over, he was court-martialed and acquitted. Those who did not join the British forces were sent on to Montreal where they remained for almost three years.

By terms of the capitulations at Ruddle's and Martin's Stations, the slaves became property of the captors. The LaForce family owned more slaves than anyone else; and as they were Tories who had moved away from Virginia to Kentucky, they made a concerted effort to regain their property. Among the slaves of Agnes LaForce was Betty, kept by Indians; Scipio, son of Betty, went to Simon Girty; James/Tim, son of Betty, went to Philip Le Duc; Ishmael, son of Betty, went to Philip Le Duc; Joseph, son of Betty, went to Capt. Mathew Elliott; Stephen, son of Betty, went to Capt Duncan Graham; Keggy, daughter of Betty, went to Capt. Mathew Elliott; Hannah, daughter of Betty, went to Frederick Fisher; Kandis, dau of Hannah, went to Capt. Alexander McKee; Job, son of Hannah; went to Jacques Duperon Baby; Grace, dau of Hannah, kept by Indians; Rachel, dau of Hannah, kept by Indians; and Patrick, son of Hannah, kept by Indians. Other slaves were Esther from Martin's Station, who went to Capt Henry Bird. In 1791, she and her son were given to William Lee for clearing 16 acres of land for Capt Bird. Selah, slave of James Trabue, was recovered from the Indians in Wayne's Treaty of 1795. Dinah, slave of Capt. John Dunkin, was recovered from the Indians in Wayne's Treaty of 1795. The fate of others remains unknown.

6. EPILOGUE

Our study identifies more Louisiana Patriots than any previous study, but we recognize we were most successful with those who later lived in Louisiana.

What one soon realizes is that the whole Gulf of Mexico and the Caribbean were involved, including Mexico, Central America, Grenada (Venezuela and Columbia), Cuba, Hispanola, Puerto Rico, and the Spanish islands. It was more of a naval war than one on land, and the crucial victories at Mobile, Pensacola, Yorktown, and Provincetown were made possible by naval maneuvers and support.

Spain and France were riding a wave of victories until the naval battles of the Saintes, where the backbone of the French West Indies fleet was broken by the British. After that defeat, the French would not support an invasion of British-held Jamaica nor relief for the British-occupied port of Charleston. Peace intervened before more could be done.

There have been a few studies of how the West Indies (the whole Gulf/Caribbean area) contributed to the War with England during the American Revolution, but patriotic organizations have not sought descendants of participants as members. On 23 Feb 2000, the National Society of the Sons of the American Revolution (NSSAR) inducted as a regular member the King of Spain, Juan Carlos I, based on his descent from King Carlos III, the leader who declared war on England. Perhaps the time has come to recognize the ordinary soldiers and sailors who fought the battles of the West Indies and gave relief to the beleaguered American colonists.

The West Indies is the most culturally and racially diverse part of the American Continent. It was historically, and remains, a melting pot of America. There were Europeans, Indians, Africans, and a few people from other continents who made the islands their home. The languages include Spanish, French, Dutch, English, and remnants of African tongues. During the War for American Independence, the Spanish and French areas were fighting the English areas. No area was safe as all were open to attack by sea.

We have not yet resolved our problems with these neighbors. We have constant immigration problems with people of Cuba and Haiti. Our own colonies, Puerto Rico and Virgin Islands, continue to protest that we have not recognized their rights.

It would be useful to show how these neighboring peoples were critical to our gaining independence as a nation. Considering the numbers involved in the wartime operations, one can suggest that most of the people in the Spanish speaking islands descend from soldiers and sailors who fought England at a time when the Colonies were exhausted and giving up hope. We should give them credit for their work.
